Here's how it works;

- We send you the textbook "Setting Out For Construction: A Practical Guide To Site Surveying" in the post as well as a field book for recording your work.
- We give you log in details for the e-learning module "Setting Out For Construction"
- We provide a list of practical exercises for you to work through (you will need an assistant for some bits of it)
- You will need to arrange your own equipment. We will provide an equipment list and can recommend suppliers. Cost of a level kit is about £10-15 per week, and the cost of a total station (e.g. Leica TS06, 07 or 09) is about £70-90 per week.
- Once you have completed each exercise, you can take a photograph of your field work in your book and any other relevant evidence (guidance is provided) and email it to me for marking.
- If you get stuck with anything at all you can call me. You can use video call if there's anything you want me to look at to do with the equipment.
- You work through the programme at your own pace and once you're confident with all the exercises we can arrange a date for the assessment and theory test in Glasgow. The assessment can be arranged at other locations, but we would need to charge for travelling time and expenses.
- The assessment is purely a test so the tutor cannot help or coach in any way. Full details for the assessment and the marking criteria will be provided in advance. The default equipment provided for the assessment is a Lecia TS09, but you are welcome to bring your own equipment along. If you fail any parts of the assessment, you can re-sit them at a cost of £250+VAT per half day (minimum charge is a half-day).
- The cost is £829.17+VAT for the 5-day course (assessment is a full day)
- If you prefer, you can purchase the book (£50) and the online course (£50) and work through the exercises at your own pace. You can then upgrade to the tutor support and assessment option if you require it (minus whatever amount you have paid for the book an eLearning).
